IN BATIK LAND

From the moment of arrival in the little city of Bandoeng in Java the traveler is fascinated by the queerness and quaintness of every little detail of daily life. He takes a "Sado" instead of a Taxi—and a Sado takes its name from the French "Dos-à-dos" or "Back to back"—because that's the way you sit in a Sado. He watches with wonder the curious doings of the dainty Javanese folk in the strange and crowded markets. He admires the beautiful designs of the Batik skirts or Sarongs worn by the little women and he marvels at the deftness and skill of the art-workers who with melted wax, flowing from bamboo fountain pens, called "Tjantings", sketch on cotton cloth the intricate patterns that are to be perpetuated by the wonderful rich blue and brown dyes of Java. He meets princes and peasants in the colorful streets—and when the reel is ended he wants more Java. And he will get it in another and utterly unlike release which is soon to follow.
